Darking of the hounds, the femous of the wolf are heard above the tempest. In the pensants are crouching with fear. It hot this aerial chase the forerunner of the Were-Wolves? Listen to their uncanny steps;

Alain, the forester, has not yet returned.
Marie, his only child, is alone at home.
"Open, Marie! It is I-Pierre."
"Where is our father?"
"Here I am. What a time we had-just missed it."

missed it.

The two men look cautiously around outside before entering, then look the door, place their guns hear the wall, take their places their guns hear the wall, take their places and smoke in silence. Marie puts the supper on the table.

"Come, Pierre: after a smoke there is nothing better than a good meal to revive one's spirits," says Alam, motioning Pierre to a seat.

"And specially when it is prepared by such a line cook as Marie," adds Pierre, Sallantly.
The old cry of the Chouans resounds in They are at it again!" exclaims the No supper for me! Stay with Marie till No supper for me! Stay with Marie till I return."

Seizing his gun, the forester stalks out of the cottage. Pierre, the richest farmer for miles around, is an ardent admirer of Marie. Her father favors his suit. Marie questions Pierre about the events of the day, and makes him relate everything in detail. He describes good-humoredly the panic fear of his shepherds.

"From the bloating I hear in the huts, passing along, I think they will soon not dare to yenture outdoors, even in broad daylight, so afraid are they of the Were-Wolf."

There is a pause.
"Now that we are alone, dear Marie, will you give me your answer? I have loved you ever since I first knew what love is; will never love anyone but you." Marie slowly lifts her eyes; they are full Have you forgotten my promise to Hoel?"
There is deep silence. It is broken by Marie. She looks earnestly at him, but there are no more tears in her eyes.
"Your own words, Pierre, are my answer. I have loved Hoel since I first knew. what love is; I will never love anyone but him."
Pierre understands it is useless to press her any further.

"Another good supper spoiled! A plague on the worthless curs!" grumbles the forester, knocking at the door. Marie lets him in. Pierre sits moodlig by the fire, his head in his hands.

"Hum!" says the old man, in an undertone, "they do not seem to have had a good time, either. Foolish girl—always the same!"

Marie will surely be taken to task for her obduracy. Pierre, feeling the searching gaze of Alain, starts to his feet and takes his gun.

"It is petting late—good night." I have her any further.

On the shore of one of the navigable rivers, which cross Britanny in all directions, in a narrow valley on the border of a forest of hollies and ilex, separated from the next valley by a heath covered with imposing cromleches, stood an old woman gathering herbs. She seemed to be part of the country. Where did she come from? Nobody knew. Nobody knew. She was wise—could predict the weather

She was wise—could predict the weather to a certainty, and in prescribing remedies for sickness among man and beast she had not her equal. The peasants called her "the wise woman" to her face, and "the night witch" behind her back.

"Night witch!" Was it because night and all the uncanny things that prowi at night had no terror for her? No one dared to offend her for fear of the evil spells she might work on their crops or flocks. Still, nebody could remember that she had ever done wrong to any one.

done wrong to any one.

"Good morning—have you seen the young mistress?" asked Yvonne, Marie's fostermother, of the old dame.

"There she is yonder, by the ford."
Marie was gazing intently at the old castie on the hill.

"Poor child! Grieving for the absent one! She, pledged to Hoel, and her father wants her to marry Pierre!" said Yvonne sorrowfully.

wants her to marry Pierre!" said Yvonne sorrowfully.

A dazed look had come lately into Marie's eyes. She was listless, absent-minded, neglected her duties, and wandered for hours in the forest. Her father unbraided her for her strange conduct; but it was useless. She never answered his reproaches. A cemplete change had come over her; she walked as in a trance, or under some powerful spell.

Pierre one evening came across two young people on the border of the forest. There was a parting kiss—the woman was Marie. But, who was the other? From his gait and costume he was surely none of their people. A young shepherd boy came rushing breathless to Pierre. The fattest lamb of the flock had been carried away. No trace of the thief. Since the killing of the mysterious she-wolf a few years ago there had not been such depredations in the village and in the forest. Not that the depredations were continuous; there was a respite, and then another lamb disappeared. The forester himbelf was kept busy hunting imaginary peachers; the game was gone, but no peachers found. The Were-Wolf, surely? Pierre had not been the only witness of Marie's meeting with the stranger. Several shepherds had seen her at evening, when they were driving their flocks through the valley. They whispered that it was not a stranger—it was the Were-Wolf himself. They knew him; had they not seen him many times at dusk on the heather, an uncouth creature, half welf and half man, fleeling at the approach of human beings? When they neared him, all at once he would assume a human guise and elude them. The boldest ones followed him as far as the forest, but never did anybody dare to venture any further on his tracks.

Marie would sometimes be gone the whole day; she had lost all interest in her home. The care of everything now devolved on Yvonne, and the good on soul herself could find no excuse for her wayward mistress.

"She is bewitched. Prayer alone can save her." said Yvonne, and she prayed

"She is bewitched. Prayer alone can save her." said Yvonne, and she prayed night and day with the fervent faith of a true Breton heart.

After one of the storny scenes that were new of daily occurrence at the forester's home Marie disappeared. Alain had driven her away, said some. She had gone away of her own accord, said others. "Served Alain right! He spolled her, and she was always willful and obstinate!"

Winter has returned. The tramp of the horsest feet, the furlous barking of the hounds, the cry of the hunter, resound again in the forest.

It is no phantom-hunt. A grand battue has been organized, under the evenwand of the grand louvetier, the Marquis de Keragouet, to track and capture the Were-Wolf. All the inhabitants for miles around are summoned to the chase. In the densest part of the forest, where no one ever dared to venture before, they come to a lonely hut. Ashes on the hearth, a plug of to bacco, a large pail half full of water, a broken stoel, denote the recent occupation of man. Another proof that the Were-Barrier and his wife, or of their where-about, she had the were-barrier and his wife, or of their where-about, she had be not the horse of the contains only these few lines:

20,000 Questions.

NOTHING COULD BETTER DEMONSTRATE THE FACT THAT THE JOURNAL CIRCULATES, THAN THE IMMENSE SUCCESS OF THE PALMISTRY DEPARTMENT CONDUCTED BY DR. CARL LOUIS PERIN. DURING THE FOUR WEEKS THAT DR. PERIN WAS IN KANSAS CITY HE RECEIVED UPWARDS OF TWENTY THOUSAND QUESTIONS, WHICH WERE ANSWERED THROUGH THE COLUMNS OF THE JOURNAL, AND THIS DE-PARTMENT WAS ONE OF THE MOST SUCCESSFUL HE HAS THE MATTER OF RESULTS. QUESTIONS WERE RECEIVED FROM 583 TOWNS AND CITIES AND FROM ALMOST EVERY STATE IN THE UNION, FROM MAINE TO CALIFORNIA. OF COURSE, THE BULK OF QUESTIONS CAME FROM KANSAS SAS CITY, KANSAS, MISSOURI AND OKLAHOMA; BUT TEXAS, NEBRASKA, IOWA AND ARKANSAS WERE ALSO WELL REP-RESENTED.

IN SPEAKING OF THE RESULTS FROM THE JOURNAL, DR. PERIN SAYS: "I CONSIDER THE JOURNAL ONE OF THE GREAT ADVERTISING MEDIUMS OF THE UNITED STATES, AND THE ENORMOUS MAIL I RECEIVED IN FOUR WEEKS WOULD CONVINCE EVEN THE MOST SKEPTICAL THAT THE JOURNAL EFFECTIVELY COVERS THE TERRITORY BE-TWEEN THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND THE ROCKIES. I WAS MENT THAT THIS TERRITORY CANNOT BE COVERED WITH-OUT THE USE OF THE JOURNAL. ALTHOUGH I HAVE CON-CHICAGO TRIBUNE, DETROIT FREE PRESS, MINNEAPOLIS TRIBUNE AND OTHER OF THE GREAT DAILIES, I CONSIDER THE DEPARTMENT CONDUCTED IN THE JOURNAL AS ONE OF THE MOST SUCCESSEUL"

ADVERTISERS WHO WANT TO REACH THE GREAT STATES OF KANSAS, MISSOURI, NEBRASKA, TEXAS, AND OKLAHOMA AND THE INDIAN TERRITORY AND THE ENTIRE SOUTHWEST WILL FIND JOURNAL ADVERTISING A PROF-ITABLE INVESTMENT. IT BRINGS RESULTS.
